WRITCOM X 402
Persuasive Writing
Persuasive writing is all around us: in editorials, in advertising, social media and even in the emails we write to friends and coworkers. Persuasive messages can take the form of logical arguments, emotionally charged rhetoric or short narratives (e.g., a TV ad). Designed for writers of all experience levels, this course introduces you to major persuasion theories from social and media psychology and to some ideas from cognitive neuroscience relevant to persuasion in a manner that is both accessible and fun. You complete exercises that help you practice persuasive writing, participate in discussions and get feedback from peers. By the end of the course, you know how to choose the best route to persuasion, considering your audiences’ motivation and readiness to change and how to format and craft a message to make it more persuasive.

He won the 2017 Quill Prose Award with his novel Coffee, Shopping, Murder, Love, which was published by Red Hen Press.

WRITCOM 461.2BWS
Flash Fiction and Nonfiction
3.0 units
This generative writing course is designed for those seeking to create essays and/or flash fiction that are composed of complex layering of memory and thought, history and imagination. The popularity of both genres, the personal essay and flash fiction, has increased as a result of today’s digital age at a time when work can be submitted to online magazines and/or anthologies and also can be uploaded on personal blogs or public spaces. Both genres are generally texts that are up to 1000 words and are highly marketable. The texts inspire both readers and writers to discover new perspectives for looking at the world, understanding their lives, and discovering meaning in random moments from their lives. In this four-day course, you will have the opportunity to explore your own writing, listen to talks and readings by published writers who produce texts across genres, study market- ing techniques, and in the process, generate new work that you will have the opportunity to revise by participating in the workshopping process. By the end of the four days together, you will craft at least two texts—one essay and one flash fiction—and develop seeds for other new work. Suitable for both new and experienced writers. Because of the compressed timeframe, students can expect a mixture of lecture, guest speakers, discussion, workshopping and in-class writing time as part of their experience.

In this Writers Studio intensive, writers produce and revise new work, deepen their knowledge of the craft of writing, gain a comprehensive understanding of how to move forward with their writing vis-à-vis publishing, revising, reading, conferences, and further workshops. Throughout the workshop, we devote time to the practice of safe, supportive community feedback. In addition to writing and craft, Creative Writing Boot Camp offers dedicated time to helping writers recognize and neutralize the undermining powers of resistance and the Inner Critic. The culminating project of this workshop is the creation of a 30-Day Writing Plan, designed to support writers for continued success with a sustainable writing practice.

Preparing Your Manuscript for Publication

3.0 units

In the ever-changing world of publishing, it is important to keep up with best practices and industry protocols when selling your work. Whether you have written a complete memoir, started a novel, outlined a book of creative nonfiction, or have an idea for a book on personal development, this course will help you to craft a winning angle for your project, draft a traditional book proposal, and articulate where your book fits into the market, guided by professional feedback and advice. Each writer completing the four-day intensive will come away with a captivating hook, a saleable proposal, a deeper understanding of publishing houses, editors and agents; a template for navigating the submission manuscript process; and connections to a broader writing community.

Literary Agent Search Prep

3.0 units

Once you’ve completed your book, mastering the query letter and synopsis are the first steps you will take on your path to traditional publication. In publishing, 80-90% of all books bought by traditional publishers are sold through literary agents. In order to land an agent, you must craft a flawless query letter, and solid synopsis, which are the keys to getting eyes on your manuscript. In this course, critically acclaimed Simon and Schuster author and former literary agent Eve Porinchak guides you in creating a stellar professional query letter and a one-page synopsis, which will significantly strengthen your chances of receiving an offer of representation from an agent. You also learn how to create a strategic plan for researching, targeting and landing the perfect agent for you and your work.

Comics and Graphic Novels

3.0 units

There’s a fascinating series of tensions in comics. In this tension between word and image, between what’s seen and unseen, passive and active readership, expectations and pay-offs, space and time and, of course, the dramatic tension that makes a given scene engaging. There’s also the tension that can arise between creative collaborators, so this course will also explore what makes for good collaboration. Comics are referred to as the “Ninth Art” in France and it’s key to understand the medium’s similarities and differences with artforms as deeply as possible. A writer simply handing a screenplay to an art team and asking them to go figure it out, for instance, is almost always a recipe for disaster. A comic script that’s been carefully tailored to the form, however, has far better chance to soar. Through a series of practical workshops, lectures that make the most nuanced theories accessible and helpful perspectives from a selection of working professional guest speakers, this course will be giving you all the insight to make the best comic possible.

Pitching for Film and Television

3.0 units

Aspiring film and television writers can spend years getting their scripts to a place where they gain traction, earning them desired meetings with industry professionals such as agents, managers, producers, showrunners and executives. Many writers find themselves unprepared for the opportunities that their hard work has earned. They may get overwhelmed or feel ill-equipped to communicate what is special about their projects or why they, (with so many other writers out there) should be hired for a particular writing assignment. In other words, they don’t know how to pitch themselves and their projects. There’s no way around it, pitching is an essential part of the business and sometimes you ‘getta tell it to sell it’. This course deconstructs and demystifies the pitching process in a way that helps writers build effective pitches and communicate them in a style that fits their personality. We’ll explore the difference between pitching for film and television, identify the commercial potential of your project, role play industry pitching scenarios and empower you to pitch with confidence. You’ll leave the course with a set of practical tools to help you pitch your film or television project in a way that generates excitement about you and your work.

Finding Your Voice

2.0 units
You’ve lived, listened, seen, had a childhood—there’s your raw material. Now it’s a question of channeling and shaping that experience with the tools of literary craft. In this beginner’s course, you explore the basics of the three major genres—fiction, nonfiction and poetry—reading and practicing within those areas of expression to help you find the modes that best fit your story and your voice. Each week you turn in short writing assignments that help you get your feet wet with craft aspects like description, character, dialogue, etc. These assignments culminate in a finished short story, essay, or poem that you present on the last day of class to a supportive workshop.

Beyond Self-Esteem: 7 Fresh Hacks Around Writer's Block

Most attempts to deal with writer's block focus on the writer's emotional state, particularly with regard to self-esteem. While these approaches have value, other weapons are available to enter one's creativity that have nothing to do with one's feelings. This workshop introduces seven hacks to bypass writer's block. This workshop will be built around playful exercises drawing from playground games, TV writers' room pitch-outs, mystical consultation, and technology, among other tools. Writers will complete the workshop with an arsenal of new tools to deftly build their creativity beyond intensive inner gazing.

Women’s Writing Weekend Workshop

Women’s stories are as diverse as women’s experiences. In this course, we focus on finding our voice on the page and allowing our writing to emerge naturally, without judgment, all in a nurturing, women- and female-identifying-empowered environment. The class is designed for writers of all levels from the new writer looking to discover her voice, to the experienced writer looking for creative inspiration. Through writing prompts, in-class writing and sharing, strength-based feedback, and simple tools and tips, we create a supportive community where every writer’s imagination is lit and nurtured. At the end of the workshop, students will leave with multiple pieces that may be seeds for future stories, develop into longer writing projects, or simply be creatively satisfying, as well as being of sense as being part of an uplifting community of women writers.

WRITING X 412.1 Short Story I

3.0 units

That novel is inside you waiting to emerge, but knowing how and where to start can be daunting. This course provides you with weekly assignments, group interaction and instructor feedback to help you explore various methods of writing your first novel while learning the key craft points of plot, structure, characterization, point-of-view, sense of place and voice. The goal is to complete the first chapter of your novel by establishing an intimacy with your characters as you artfully shape their journey and to develop an overall concept to guide you through your story. Required for students considering the long-fiction sequence.

Romance Novel I
3.0 units
Romance novels generate just over one billion dollars in sales revenue annually in the United States. With online platforms allowing authors to learn to write better, find compatible publishers or publishing options and market the work product, there has never been a more welcoming climate for romance writers. Whether you’re an aspiring author interested in learning the basics of writing a romance or an experienced writer looking to refine your craft, Romance Writing I provides students with the fundamental skills necessary to write a romance novel. By studying samples from the genre and craft essentials specific to the genre, students understand the building blocks of the roman novel and create a “build out” for their own romance novel in the first of this two-course sequence.

WRITING X 414.2E Science Fiction and Fantasy Novel II
3.0 units
The second of a three-course sequence, this workshop expands on the development of story concept, worldbuilding, character, and plot explored in the first course. This second workshop focuses on critical but underemphasized aspects of compelling science fiction and fantasy novels, including plot structure and scenecraft. The workshop also interrogates accepted tropes and structures of science fiction and fantasy novels by exploring non-Western storytelling structures, including the East Asian four-act structure and nested or circular story structures from East Asia, South Asia and the Muslim world. The workshop also includes a rigorous workshop within a workshop that teaches students how to create a plot grid that will map out their novel from the beat level all the way up to the act level, while tracking all plot threads for rhythm and pacing. Students will learn how to shape and manipulate that plot grid into a satisfying and deliberate act structure. The goal is to complete fifty polished pages of a novel and a work in progress version of the plot grid by the end of this three-course sequence.

WRITING X 413.1E Story Structure for the Novel
3.0 units
Many aspiring novelists write with the hope that inspiration will come. The result is time wasted on a flabby novel with no clear shape and a sagging pace. On the other hand, story structure gives your novel a spine, it forms the bones of your story. And just as adding flesh and clothing to a body makes that body more unique, so does any creative addition the writer makes to his or her basic structure. This course teaches you how to build that skeleton, from a solid premise line to the writer’s voice are also explored. The goal is to produce a substantial portion of your novel.

Writing the Family Narrative

3.0 units

As writers, our ancestral history breathes through our bodies and appears on the written page, whether we realize it or not. The stories of those who came before us—and the legacies they bear for better or worse—are what we carry. We'll use family history, gossip, and lore, as well as photographs, ephemera, and other available documentation to discover the factual and emotional truths of ourselves and our families. We'll explore different ways to tell these stories, even when little information is known. Each week we’ll build a small body of creative nonfiction work and look at what these narratives say about us and the people in our lives.

Planning Your Memoir (Two-Weekend Workshop)

1.0 units

In this four-day workshop, we delve into the art of crafting your life’s narrative, focusing on the pivotal role of timelines and outlines—the beating heart and essential skeleton of any compelling memoir. Through lectures and guided discussions, we will tackle challenges such as defining what stories are compelling, assessing engaging memories, and organizing your memoir coherently. We will explore the ethics involved in writing a memoir based on your personal vignettes and real-life characters, including considerations of what to include and what to leave out. A memoir is factual and verifiable, so we’ll also discuss how to approach controversial subjects while safeguarding your personal narrative. By the end of this course, you will have a comprehensive outline and perhaps the first pages of your memoir, providing a solid starting point for your writing journey.

Memoir and Personal Essay Two-Sunday Workshop

1.5 units

Everyone has a story (and often many stories) to tell, whether your life has been a wild ride or a quiet stroll. This course is designed for those interested in learning more about the similarities and differences between the two forms and how to explore and shape your stories. Through exercises, prompts and workshop, you begin work on several stories; you may develop some of these into longer pieces, while others may simply get your creative juices flowing. Because both personal essay and memoir call upon the writer to dig deep and hover patiently over the material of memory, this weekend’s worth of writing and exploration gives you tools for staying the course long after the actual class has finished.

WRITING X 423.1
Memoir I
3.0 units

A memoir is a book-length narrative that is told from the writer’s point of view and captures a meaningful slice of the writer’s life. If you have a story to tell and would like to figure out how best to tell it, this course helps you get started. In-class writing exercises help you identify significant moments from your life, decide on a workable structure for telling your story and determine what exactly your story is about. You also focus on the habits and tools you need to establish and maintain a writing practice and read excerpts from a range of memoirs for inspiration and guidance. By the end of the course, you have an outline and a draft of one to two chapters.

WRITING X 424.1E
Literary Journalism I
3.0 units

Literary journalism is nonfiction prose that transcends “who, what, where, and when” to give a more detailed, richer and vivid picture of real events. It combines an immersive approach to reporting with the aims and techniques of fiction. Although this type of writing has roots in antiquity (i.e., Thucydides’ The Peloponnesian War), contemporary practitioners include Tom Wolfe, Joan Didion, John McPhee and Gay Talese. Today, literary journalism appears in periodicals such as The New Yorker, The Atlantic Monthly, Esquire and Harper’s Magazine, as well as in the magazines or literary supplements of many major newspapers. By the end of the course, you have an understanding of the basic techniques for reporting and writing such journalism and at least one project started.

Writing the Review
3.0 units

Everybody’s a critic, or so they say. When you can share any and every opinion on social media, what makes professionally published reviews special? Why should one person’s take on a movie, TV show, book or other piece of art matter more than yours or mine? But the truth lies in the opposite: When everyone has a platform to offer their opinion, learning the true art of criticism is all the more important for standing out in this course, we learn how to effectively and compellingly crafted critical critiques, with units on film, TV, books, literature and more. We read reviews by professional critics while exploring the different multimedia platforms criticism can live on today. The focus of this class is on sharpening your critical faculties and developing your voice as a writer, with the ultimate goal of finding your space as a respected critic.

Writing for Young Readers

Writing for Kids and Middle Grade Readers

WRITING X 446.2E Writing for Young Readers I

3.0 units

If you want to write for kids, you need to think like a kid and enjoy the process of returning to the imaginative, possibility-filled world of childhood. This course introduces you to all major categories of writing for young people, including concept books, picture books, beginning readers, chapter books, middle grade novels, young adult (YA) novels and nonfiction for all age ranges. You learn the basic storytelling principles of story structure, plot, character development and dialogue as it applies to each genre, and discover your own niche in the world of children's publishing. You also learn how to tailor your work to the psychological and emotional development, reading abilities, and interests of each age group. The goal is to complete a draft of a manuscript for a picture book or a sample chapter and chapter outline for older readers. Query letters, marketing and resources for children's book writers are also covered in detail.

WRITING X 444.1 Middle Grade Novel I

3.0 units

Middle grade novels have a demanding audience. Young readers want interesting stories that either transport them to a world unlike their own or that show them that they are not alone, that there are others who feel and experience the same things that they do. They want gut-wrenchingly true stories, even if they are fantasy or sci-fi. This course helps you shape your middle grade novel idea into a workable outline and gives you the tools to execute that plan. You read and study successful middle grade novels, practice and experiment with fiction-writing techniques, take and give feedback with your peers' work through workshop and learn revision techniques. By the end of the course, you have a synopsis or outline and a solid draft of two chapters.

SCRIPT 726.13
Anatomy of a Pilot

A new television show has exactly one shot at survival: its pilot episode. If the viewer isn’t grabbed in the first hour, they’re gone forever. But what is a pilot? How is it different from all other forms of screenwriting? What makes a good one work and a bad one fail? And how can you be sure yours is one of the winners? In this intensive, informative, and entertaining course, you learn everything you need to know about what goes into winning a pilot. By dissecting recent network and cable pilots, you examine character, theme, and structure, and discuss which pilots best launched their respective series. Emphasis is on identifying the common structural elements of all successful pilots, gaining an understanding of “weekly franchise” versus “series mythology” and crafting long-term character arcs.

SCRIPT X 465.6E Crafting the Thematic Heart and Soul of Your Story
1.0 units
If structure is the skeleton of a story, theme is its heart and soul. It’s what makes your story universal and what raises it above all those that simply entertain. If your goal is to craft a story that resonates emotionally with a global audience, this course guides you through theme and how it unifies character and plot. Through lectures, discussions, and practical writing assignments, you learn why a clearly defined thematic argument is the foundation of a great story, how theme is different from premise, motif or subject matter, and how to find it for your story. You explore the most successful and often-used themes in classic and modern films, and apply effective techniques to tap into the thematic argument of your story and make sure it remains “invisible” throughout the story. With so many definitions and misunderstandings, this course demystifies theme once and for all.

SCRIPT X 401 Get Your Story Straight
1.0 units
In this short introductory workshop designed for beginners, you learn the key building blocks for a story: a structurally solid screenplay. You begin by refining your story idea by studying and workshopsing the elements that make for a successful logline. You then expand upon that and learn how to structure your story into three compelling acts. Special attention is paid to developing a protagonist character your audience will really care about and how that ties into the plot of your story using the major plot points. By the end of the course you have a refined logline, character bio and basic beat sheet that covers the major beats of your story from beginning, middle and end.

SCRIPT X 442.1 Developing Video Game Narratives
3.0 units
Writing for games requires an understanding of structure that goes beyond linear storytelling. From the early days of tabletop gaming to more recent hits like Mass Effect and Fallout, writers are expected to hold many possible worlds—with multiple branching story points—in their heads. And to ultimately translate those concepts into actionable materials. In this course, you explore the nature of interactive story by working in multiple different formats (choose your own adventure, virtual novels, the Telltale style, etc.) and writing games that exemplify the fundamental concepts of branching narrative. The course goal is to develop a vocabulary for interactive fiction and to write a game in the format of your choosing that can be used as a calling card for future work.

Kemp Powers (playwright and screenwriter, One Night in Miami), Aaron Sorkin (The Trial of the Chicago 7 and The Social Network), and Sheila Callaghan (writer and producer, Shameleon) are among countless television and film writers who got their start in the theatre and who continue to work in both disciplines. Agents and producers often read plays with the goal of finding a writer who excels at character-driven storytelling—which is at the heart of theatre. In this course, you learn tools to deepen your characters, expand on new plot ideas, and most importantly, find your unique voice as a writer. You first explore the fundamentals of play construction and writing techniques, writing frequently to master the art and craft of playwriting, culminating in a one-act play or one act of a play. You then learn to apply your newfound skills to your own film or TV script and have the best 10 pages ready to be performed by actors in the final class.

Scripted Podcasting
3.0 units
There is something to be said for letting your ears paint the pictures. Before television, radio served as the primary mode of entertainment for audiences seeking powerful storytelling. Radio’s transition to “scripted audio” or “scripted podcasts” has opened doors for screenwriters to write, produce, and release their own content, which may in turn be picked up and adapted for film and television. All those years it was drummed into screenwriters: ‘show, don’t tell.’ You can’t show.
There is no screen! You adjust to thinking in terms of sound only. APPLAUSE!

Thought-Provoking Horror Narratives for Television and Film
3.0 units
This comprehensive 10-week course offers aspiring screenwriters a deep dive into the world of crafting powerful, thought-provoking horror stories that resonate across cultures. Drawing from diverse global influences, including Latin American, European, South Korean, and Japanese horror, participants will explore various sub-genres, such as social horror and war horror, focusing on addressing contemporary societal issues. Through engaging workshops, expert-led discussions, and hands-on writing exercises, students will dissect iconic TV series and films, examining the successful integration of horror and social commentary while honing their distinctive storytelling voices. The course covers various essential screenwriting topics, from the history of horror cinema and diverse horror genres to screenwriting fundamentals like character development, plot structure, dialogue crafting, and visual storytelling. Additionally, students will learn about polishing their screenplays, obtaining and incorporating feedback, and submitting their work for consideration. Participating in lectures and workshops, analyzing seminal horror TV series and movies, composing their work for consideration. How to Research Your Story
3.0 units
Research always pays off (and not just when it comes to historical works of fiction). This is especially true when it comes to things that we think we know, things we’ve seen depicted before, like the inner workings of a law firm or the emergency room in a hospital. The most important step in writing a screenplay (or novel) is gaining the breadth of knowledge and mastery of the material that’s necessary to write with authority. The facts you find are almost always better than the stuff that you make up, and the creative decisions and choices you make based on research lead to improvements that won’t happen in any other way. The goal of the course is to learn how to gain mastery and become an authority on the subject of a screenplay you are currently developing. Students must bring either an outline or a completed script to be ready to workshop at the start of class.

How to Write Funny, Compelling Dialogue that Doesn’t Suck
3.0 units
Great, funny, compelling dialogue is easier than you think. It comes when you focus on one single thing: your moral premise. There’s a vice and a virtue ready to argue with each other, and funny lines arrive when you see the strengths and weaknesses in your argument. In this workshop, you learn how screenplay structure can be dialogue’s best friend, how to write great dialogue by drawing from your worst life moments, and how to be a ruthless editor. You also learn how to avoid dialogue pitfalls like wordiness, clunkiness, ambivalence, and wishy-washiness. By the end of the course, you write dialogue that cracks like a whip.

Creating Memorable Characters Through Their Core
3.0 units
Memorable stories are grounded by great characters. The core of who those characters are drive the story, but characters need to take action, and those actions need to ring true to their core as they move from one plot point to the next. Why is your character making that specific choice at a particular moment? What’s their motivation? Whether you are finished with a draft or just have a nugget of an idea, the core of your characters must be excavated. Through examples, discussions, and writing exercises, you discover your characters’ needs, wants, and drives. You flush out how your characters act and feel to discover who they are fundamentally. You also address how the core elements of your characters influence plot and structure and discover ways to reveal that through action and dialogue. The goal of this course is to chart the emotional journey of your protagonist character and leave with tools that can be applied to make every character, regardless of how big or small, play meaningful roles in your story.

You begin by refining your story idea and outline as needed and then write your script—focusing on capturing the essence of the show through its act structure, plot and story, multiple storylines, characters, scenes and dialogue. You also learn how to develop your career game plan and the business of the one-hour drama. Students must bring a complete outline to the first class. All student projects must focus on current shows; no pilots.

Anyone who wants to work as a professional television writer has to come back to week after week? If you’re writing a spec of an existing show, you have been true to the characters and situations as we know them, and still told a story that is somehow new? In this course, you review the choices your characters make, the consequences of those choices and how to make those consequences more dramatic. You look at your actions, your pacing your tension and your stakes; among other things. The goal is to improve your one-hour or half-hour script until it’s a story that demands the reader’s attention.

This workshop guides you to write a solid draft of an original pilot script from your half-hour outline created in the previous course. You start by reworking your story idea and outline as needed, fixing story problems and maximizing the comic potential. Special attention is paid to refining the world, characters, tone and story of your pilot. You then move toward completing a first draft of your script, working on scenes, dialogue and action, and returns your original vision and matches a network’s likely requirements. You must bring a completed story outline and ten pages to the first day of class.

Prerequisite(s): SCRIPT X 423 Half-Hour TV III, or SCRIPT X 424.1 Half-Hour TV Intensive III, or SCRIPT X 424.2 Dramedy TV III, or department approval.

Rewriting Your Script as a Showrunner

6.0 units

You have written your pilot script. Now what? Those of us who have sold pilots to broadcasters and streamers know that the job is just beginning. This fast-paced intensive course is designed for what is next. You begin by submitting your previously written pilot (either half-hour or hour) and then learning how to rewrite for production and studio notes. With feedback from your instructor and fellow participants, you will learn the process of responding to studio creative notes and production mandatory notes. Throughout this process, you will refine the world of your show; test your script characters and conflict; and refine your storytelling engine. This intensive workshop will then guide you through basic show-running principles including how to communicate and work with your studio and streamer, what to look for in hiring and casting; assembling a crew, and pre-production and post production concepts. On the business side, you will hear from guest speakers and learn how to develop your career game plan and learn about the business of television in this rapidly changing landscape.
